

Foreword

The reason for choosing the MIT license was to facilitate rapid development and improvement, without the restrictions and/or controversy surrounding the GPL. This has the necessary side effect of making our code available for use in closed source, proprietary applications. Please understand that we certainly have no objections to people profiting from our code. In fact, we hope it brings success to many people. However, we have a strong moral objection to the act of taking other people's hard work, repackaging it with a pretty logo, and reaping profits without contributing anything back to the people that were so generous to you. So, while you are legally entitled to do anything you like, within the bounds of the MIT license, we ask that you please abide by the spirit of open source. Share your improvements with the community, respect the hard work of others, and remember that this project represents a labor of love by real human beings.

With all that being said, please enjoy this code and, as long as you are good citizen within the PXI community, use this code for your benefit with our blessing. And now, cue the legalese...
